VALUE FUNDS

Earning recovery can revive performance, invest with five-year horizon

SARBAJEET KSEN

Value funds delivered strong returns in 2023 (up 35.2 per cent) and 2024 (20.1 per cent). However, they have had a turbulent time recently, with a category attractively priced stocks. Investors benefit when markets adjust, and stock prices move closer to fair value. These schemes tend to do well when the market offers mispriced

Scope for turnaround
Value funds can witness a turnaround and contribute to wealth creation as the pace of earnings revives.

“Broadly, value as a category does well when growth is broad-based, with valuations at or below fair zones. Since the early part of 2025, valuations have been on the higher side, which can be a challenge. Incrementally, the correction in the broader markets in the past few months and expectations of earnings growth recovery are positive for the value style,” says Christy Mathai, fund manager-equity, Quantum Asset Management Company.

“As the economy recovers and market momentum broadens, value funds are likely to do well. Broader markets tend to offer more opportunities for value investing. With the current “Value funds typically do well in phases of the market cycle where valuations are reasonably supported by earnings growth. In euphoric phases where markets do not give much credence to valuation or quality of companies, the value style may disappoint. An investor needs to be prepared for underperformance in such phases,” says Mathai.

Some value funds may invest in turnaround stories or companies undergoing restructuring. While such bets can unlock significant value, they are often riskier and may take longer to play out.

Long-term play

Experts suggest that investors consider value funds only with a long-term horizon.

“These are diversified to capture opportunities across
